

He can't help it. Patrick Sullivan is happiest when he is making people laugh. But it's a long way from being a funny person to being a professional comedian. From the first giggles he got on the playground (avoiding punches with punch lines) to the major showrooms of Las Vegas and Atlantic City, Patrick has taken his comedic instincts and honed them to become an accomplished writer, comedy performer, and actor.

But long before the profession, came the passion. As a child, Patrick's enthusiasm for comedy was downright obsessive. He was glued to the TV watching every comedic nuance of his favorites — Abbott and Costello, Jackie Gleason, and Jack Benny. As a teen he'd drift off to sleep with the radio humor of Firesign Theatre and The National Lampoon Radio Hour. During homeroom, Patrick eagerly recreated sketches from Saturday Night Live and SCTV.

Luckily for Patrick, his hometown of Cleveland opened one of the first comedy clubs in the mid-west and he was front row. After winning first prize in an amateur stand-up show, he was hooked and the experience changed his life forever.

Working twelve-hour days as a construction worker, he began moonlighting as a professional comedian. When he started getting offers to tour, he quit his day job and began doing stand-up full-time.

As Patrick paid his dues on the road, working with Drew Carey, Robin Williams, and Tim Allen, he mastered stand up comedy. He developed his own "voice" — a style that allows him to unite a diverse audience through laughter and create a shared experience. He is entertaining but never offensive or mean-spirited. He is funny in a way that all can relate to and his tailored material resonates well across all audiences.

H U M O R R E S O U R C E

Patrick is a well-seasoned entertainer who appears frequently in nightclub venues, performances in major theatres, and radio and television broadcasts. Pat's stage presence and unique delivery style have made him a favorite of audiences nationwide since 1984.

Patrick began Humor Resource as an opportunity to do what he loves and in the process, help corporations realize their goal in creating an atmosphere of wellness, productivity, and camaraderie through shared laughter.

patrick.sullivan @
HumorResource.com

